COL. HALLOWELL'S APPOINTMENTS.
 Hon. J. R. Hallowell, Republican candidate for congress, will address the voters of the Seventh district at the places and dates following:

McPherson..... 2 p. m., Oct. 26
 Canton..... 2 p. m., Oct. 27
 Topeka..... 2 p. m., Oct. 28

The smallest man in the United States treasury department is Thomas Hall of Indiana. He is thirty-seven inches high and weighs thirty-two pounds. The largest man in the building is the imperial colored gentleman who turns the hinges of the secretary's door.

A case has been taken, on appeal, from an Iowa court to the United States circuit court at Little Rock, Ark., which involves the constitutionality of the Wilson bill. It is expected that Judge Caldwell will render a decision on the case this week. It is looked forward to with unusual interest.

As a matter of accident rather than design the congressional candidates in this district will be each at the home of the other today. Colonel Hallowell resuming his campaign and speaking at Medicine Lodge, and Mr. Simpson speaking in this city tonight, agent the Alliance demonstration today.

The Democrats hope to steal in three congressmen and a governor in Nebraska this fall, with the assistance of the Alliance. In Kansas the situation is exactly reversed as to congressmen. In all but one district it is the Alliance that is attempting to commit the overt act, the Democrats simply being accessories.

If the Atchison Champion could but compass the defeat of Senator Ingalls and Hon. J. R. Hallowell its cup of satisfaction would run over. But it is a source of satisfaction to be assured that the esteemed will enjoy its desire only in the anticipation. Despite its desire it will be Senator Ingalls and Congressman Hallowell.

The farmers of the west, whenever they want to, can put the solid north into the saddle and the Mills-Breckinridge-Kilgore gang to the front in the government. The job is not difficult whenever the western farmers want to do it. All that is necessary is to defeat the Republican candidates in the western congressional districts.—Ex.

If Horace Greeley were alive today, says the Washington Post, he would be compelled to amend his famous bit of advice so that it would read, "Go south-west, young man." Correct you are. Don't stop till you have firmly planted the seeds of your shoes upon the fertile soil of these parts and exulted your respiratory organs with our incomparable ozone.

"God save America from such wages" was the prayer of the New York Sun when the Democratic free trade Mills bill was before the house. But the last congress having passed a bill that increases the average rate of duty from 47 to 60 per cent, that misral blatherskite is as dumb as a clam concerning the augmented cost of living to the masses of the people by reason of the latter.

The son-in-law of the murdered Gen. Barrandine has reached New York from Guatemala. He is accompanied by a bill of $100,000 against Uncle Sam for damages, which he will at once present to Secretary Blaine for collection. If Bradstreet's Mercantile agency wants to extend the scope of its usefulness it will keep run of the market value of Guatemalan generals so that a cheaper article can be selected for slaughter; that is to say, if we are to be expected to pay the bills.

It becomes more apparent with every announcement made by the census bureau that the enumeration has been a failure as for accuracy. If its efforts at gathering statistics as to the various other features of the work shall be as unreliable, it were better that it had not been done at all. The value of the information will be greatly depreciated in any event by reason of loss of public confidence.

Colonel L. L. Polk, president of the Southern Farmers' Alliance, used this language in an interview published in the Atlanta Constitution: "I am Col. L. L. Polk, of Confederate fame, president of the Southern Farmers' Alliance at a salary of $4,000 a year, and we southern Alliance men and southern Democratic party are working hand in hand to save the credit of the nation from the destruction by the G. A. R. and I wish to pass northward and assist the Alliance brothers in Kansas and Nebraska to elect northern Democrats to congress, who are also deeply interested in saving the national credit." Bull for Colonel Polk! In the same strain the Charleston World says that the Farmers' Alliance is the only organization which apparently is not afraid of the grand army. This may be true in the south, but in the north not yet. The old soldier has caught on to that racket.

INTERNAL REVENUE NONSENSE.

Thanks to United States Commissioner Emery at Seattle, one of the nonsensical thorns in the flesh of retail tobacco dealers has been plucked out. Among the absurdly rigid requirements, which have heretofore been enforced by the courts, is the technicality against a dealer taking a piece of tobacco from the original package and displaying it in his window before sale. He had to lift it tenderly from the original box and place it directly in the purchaser's hand.

Commissioner Emery took this foolish bull by the horns last Thursday. He had a guileless celestial before him who had been dragged to judgment for the heinous offense of displaying a piece of tobacco in his show window. He decided that the law does not specify how long the article shall be out of the original package before it is sold, and dismissed the case. This illustrates the petty annoyances of the revenue system. It has a tendency to disgust respectable dealers by treating them, like children, to a kindergarten dose of birch rods.

The decision is based on common sense and should become the universal rule of action, and in order to make it so the department should instruct its officials and the public.

WHERE OUR GREATEST WEALTH IS.

After a tour of the great west Col. Richard J. Hinton wrote a descriptive article for the Forum, from which the following is extracted:

"In the region beyond the 98th meridian of longitude west of Greenwich, the initial point being St. Paul, and its final one North Platte, Neb., while on the south it extends eastward to Fort Worth, Tex., eighteen states and territories were visited and traversed. The contrast offered by it to the solitudes of 1895 was almost amazing. West of the meridian named there are now at least 22,000 miles of railroad, and telegraph wires not less than 150,000 miles. Of telephone and electric light cables, in proportion to population, there are more miles in use than elsewhere in the United States. There is today more property owned per capita than elsewhere on the continent. Two-fifths of the national domain is found west of the line given, and certainly the remaining three-fifths of the public lands of the United States must be sought for in the same region; and that, too, without considering Alaska. Yet how few persons are cognizant of the fact that east and west, the geographical center of the union is somewhere in the Bay of San Francisco; for with the Aleutian Islands, flying over its flag within fifty miles of the Siberian coast of Asia, our domain extends, on a northwestern and southeastern line, some 3,000 miles beyond the Golden Gate.

It will be observed that Kansas occupies a central position, north and south, in the vast domain described, and being thus situated, with capacity to produce ample provision supplies for the balance of the territory that must necessarily be devoted largely to mining and other industrial enterprises, facts that cannot but inure to the incalculable benefit of this state.

POWDERLY'S PLAN.

General Master Workman Powderly has submitted to the Knights of Labor, through their journal, a ballot on which are printed five questions pertaining to the future position of that body in relation to politics and political action.

This ballot is to be cut from the Journal, answered, and sent to the general secretary, so that the sentiment of the order may be discovered by the next meeting of the general assembly. These are the questions:

1. Do you favor taking independent political action? 2. Do you favor turning the order into a party? 3. Should we cooperate with members of other industrial organizations in organizing a party, with maintaining our order as an educational and industrial institution? 4. If you favor co-operation with others, would you have your general officers unite with the officers of other industrial movements in issuing a call for a national industrial reform conference? 5. Should we continue to vote with existing parties, making the best terms possible with them on industrial issues?

From the remarks of this paper Mr. Powderly himself is undoubtedly in favor of this plan given in the third question; co-operation with other industrial organizations to form a party, as he does not consider the Knights of sufficient numerical strength to form a party by themselves. That there is, however, weakness in both plans, he himself indicates when showing the enormous difficulties in the way of forming a new party. Parties are of slow growth, and some more strongly defined purpose and some more urgent need than the mere desire of changing of power from one order to another, is necessary to give a new party the tenacity of principle and the persistent energy to suffer defeat after defeat, and still even retain its original strength, much less increase it. This the Knights of Labor have not, and the plan that will likely receive the fewest votes is undoubtedly the wisest for them, that is, "to continue to vote with existing parties making the best terms possible with them on industrial issues."

For if they have strength enough to lead them into the thought of founding a new party, they ought to be able to turn the election in favor of that party with which they cast their votes; and this being so, that party would certainly be willing to make some concessions to them. And concessions from a winning party, would surely be of more value to them than being forever a defeated party.

Every Republican in Sedgewick county ought to be personally interested in the contest this fall for county officers, and ought to do everything possible to secure the election of the excellent ticket nominated by the Republican party. We can think of no reason why the county ticket should not receive every Republican vote in the county. This being the case it is but reasonable to expect that the exceptionally clean and able ticket will receive the full party vote.

An Emporia centipede ate a tarantula. When the whisky in which both have been placed has eaten up the centipede, it will be strong enough for the Wichita market.—Lawrence Record.

It isn't often that one sees so much profanity and exhortation hurled in so brief a space as the foregoing; and, then, being founded on the truth (it is), and emanating from the source of absolute truth-telling (it does), it is simply unanswerable.

A committee of the American Board of Foreign Missions has issued a tabular statement showing that while all the other great benevolences of the congressional body have increased within a decade by an average of 80 per cent the contributions to the board have been at a virtual stand still. There has been so much talk about a better market that religious people seem disposed to look out for the domestic heathen first before contributing to the support of the poorer heathen on the other side. This is like returning to first principles and acting upon the literal rendering of the great commission to "go teach all nations, beginning at Jerusalem."

The apologetics for the McKinley bill (it has no advocates in this part of the country) point to the additions made to the free list, that is, articles from which the duty has been removed. This is admitted. But what strikes the average citizen with especial force is the fact that the price on none of these articles has, as yet, been appreciably reduced, while everything on which the impost was raised advanced in price, many of them even before the bill became a law. It is this practical demonstration that is telling upon the people.

Object teaching is unquestionably the most forceful of any method yet employed. This was practically demonstrated over in Illinois recently. A young lady teacher was charged with brutally whipping a youngster, and the case hinged on the wells made with her switch. The counsel for the defense undertook to convince the jury that the very center of a known switch would raise a welt. This he did by baring his leg and bringing the switch into practical play. He won the case.

SOME ADVICE TO STUMP SPEAKERS.

Speaking out of doors is generally regarded as injurious to the health and destructive to the vocal organs, but, except in the case of speaking against strong, cold winds, or in damp, misty weather, I have not so found it. My health has generally improved during campaigns and my voice has grown stronger and richer with daily use.

A few rules may be laid down in small space, which, if carefully followed, will be of great use to the stump speaker. Never drink cold water while speaking, no matter how thirsty you may be. The sudden shock to the overheated and delicate organs of the throat produces congestion and injures the voice.

When suffering from hoarseness, refrain from speaking altogether. When not speaking, keep up a daily breathing and vocal exercise. Pitch your voice below, rather than above, its natural key.

Let your articulation be perfect, every letter sounded, and every sound formed with force and precision. Speak less rapidly than you do indoors, and keep the lungs constantly inflated.

Remember that the orator is like a gun barrel, which must be straight, must have a bore as large as the bullet, and must have the powder below the ball.

Project the sound waves in the proper direction, just as you would aim a bullet at the mark.

The observance of these rules will, I believe, enable any vigorous man, with ordinary vocal powers, to speak daily to large audiences in the open air, without injury to his health or his voice.

EXCHANGE SHOTS.

Agreed All Around.

From the Lawrence Journal.

Mr. John Willits and his sister seem to agree exactly upon one point. Both of them say John is not fit to be governor of Kansas. So far no one has been found who is willing to take the responsibility of disputing the assertion.

Well, What's He There For.

From the Emporia Republican.

Gen. Flanagan, the Republican candidate for governor of Texas, is making his canvass with as much vigor and enthusiasm as the other industrial organizations in organizing a party, with maintaining our order as an educational and industrial institution? 4. If you favor co-operation with others, would you have your general officers unite with the officers of other industrial movements in issuing a call for a national industrial reform conference? 5. Should we continue to vote with existing parties, making the best terms possible with them on industrial issues?

From the Emporia Republican.

Nevada has recently lost both her governor and lieutenant governor by death, but the little ballcock proposes to get along without those officials until the next election. As they don't have any in Nevada, there is not much for the governor to do at this season of the year.

The Jewish Synagogue.

From the New York Star.

The building of Jewish places of worship in this city has kept pace with the rapid growth of our Jewish population during the past few years. It is reported that there are about five times as many synagogues here as there were in 1880. Yet the Temple Emanuel stands as the finest and most edifice for the Jewish service in the United States.

A Fellow Feeling, Eh?

From the New York Republican.

The Republican papers of the Seventh district that are holding up Jere Simpson's unbelief as a reason why he should be defeated, are making a mistake. It may be true that Simpson parades his views offensively, but the simple fact that he casts his vote for the Republican ticket is nothing to his discredit or against his honor. It is needless to call attention of the people who are in any way informed to the fact that some of the brightest minds that have ever brought blessings to our race could not accept on yet of title of the Christian faith. And those intellects were surely as comprehensive as, penetrating, as well instructed as are any in the Seventh district. This senseless talk should be called off. The time has not yet arrived when things Republican should be based on narrowness.

A Southern Opinion of Blaine.

From the Atlanta Constitution.

The exposition will be notable for the visit of two men of national reputation. Mr. Blaine, who, as secretary of state, is a more striking figure than the president, and Senator John W. Daniel, of Virginia, who has a reputation for eloquence and profundity of thought second to no man now in public life. As the exposition will be in public life, it is not surprising that the action of the part of Mr. Blaine will cover a multitude of party sins.

Mr. Blaine stands for all that is progressive in the Republican party, and his effort to build up a trade between this country and Spanish America can be appreciated by the people of the South Atlantic and Gulf states, who will be among the first to profit by such a trade. In his efforts for the enlargement of commerce he has good Democratic convictions.

SUNFLOWER SHIMMER.

Banquets are largely matters of course. An Atchison woman hides her potatoes in a new place every night.

Who was it that called D. R. Anthony "a hooked-nosed old devil?"

Will Mrs. Linthicum get anything from the next state administration?

The cheers that go up for Senator Plumb in Kansas are above suspicion.

Senator Plumb did not pass through Bill McKinley's district on his way home.

A Kansas campaign is a splendid time to count the men who haven't political aspirations.

Luther Chellis is rivaling Ed Howe for center scrutiny. He says Ingalls is of the center gender.

The Pittsburg Post remarks that the greater part of Senator Ingalls' head is above his ears.

Cliff Baker and Jake Stotter are traveling over the state together, but they don't sleep in the same bed.

Attorney General Kellogg says the Alliance leaders have directed the rank and file to boycott his meetings.

Willits is not any farther off from the government than his shoe who is bounding him, is from martyrdom.

The Kansas City Times' delinquent tax lists causes more sensation in Kansas than all its Ingalls expose put together.

George T. Anthony's stock of gubernatorial dignity has lasted him longer than any other Kansas governor's.

Why is it that the things Senator Ingalls says in Kansas are not as quotable as the remarks he makes in other states?

Cold water should not be taken by speakers while on the stump—this much in justice to the prohibition orators.

The state central committee will have to tarry Speaker Tom up, if they want to read any Democrats out of the party.

Whatever Senator Ingalls' possessions may be, it is a very difficult thing to learn to write his name without an apostrophe.

Leoford Brady was fined $10 and costs for saying that ex-Governor Harvey practiced his own brother out of the penitentiary.

The Kansas readers of the Star can never really understand how Alex Butts can get up a longer "Missouri column" than "Kansas Notes."

Jim Gould is in Kansas. Mr. Gould's first name was formerly written "Jason." But it was without writing in Wall street, nowadays, that Jay's on.

Atchison is going to ask for more than a senator from the next legislature. It wants an appropriation of $75,000 for the soldiers' orphans' home.

Sensor Plumb was expected home yesterday. He will find his presidential boom in a much healthier state than it was on his departure for Washington, last spring.

It is no longer permissible for a police commissioner in Leavenworth to feel his official dignity when he wakes up in the morning. He may have been bounced over night.

Three Kansas women, a grandmother, mother and daughter of the Bean family, of Valley Falls, became each the mother of twins in the same evening. It is a remarkable case.

It is marvelous how many public men in Kansas have to confess to interviewers that they haven't read the Phillips-Foster original package decision and are not ready with opinions.

The present campaign has developed so many unvillified characteristics that the state association of the Y. M. C. A. for Kansas at its recent session voted to abandon its foreign missionary ideas.

The editor of the Abilene Reflector has written Mr. Woodward's "Old Wine in New Bottles." He compliments it highly.

Webb Wilder's "Best Book" seems to have taught him something after all.

Gen. Caldwell has been summoned by the Court of Pals to the field of Gettysburg. Mr. Caldwell fails to tell his audience in his high protective tariff talks what a custom officer's duty to a conspiring Royalist on landing in a republic ought to be.

Ingalls certainly made a striking appearance says the Pittsburg Post. As he came into view he removed from his head a gray hat, and, showing his gray hair, short in the back, thick directly in the middle. His gray mustache, the hairs dropping down over his mouth, his tuft of gray chin whiskers and his gray full overcoat, with the ever-present glasses astride his ample nose, completed a figure so harmonious and uncommon that it would not fail to attract attention anywhere.

The greater part of Ingalls' hair is above his ears. The cranial development extends forward and backward and makes the contrast with this little chin and jaws almost comically strong. The caricatures of him which are seen in the comic papers are very life like. His voice is strong and full and easily heard in all parts of the theater. He speaks deliberately and clearly, and while not reaching out after electioneering effects realizes that there are in the art of elocution some points worth taking advantage of. Still, his speech as a mere oratorical effort was no better than one can hear every day on half the political campaign and in the court house in the country. There was none of the halting, hemming and stammering so often seen and heard in public speakers whose minds go off skimming for words and ideas while they leave to their tongues the entertainment of the audience. Ingalls was guilty of nothing of that kind. His speech flowed clear and uninterrupted, like a running stream, pleasant to the sense of hearing and to the artistic sense that will not brook broken and discordant expression or jarred and jangled thoughts.

READY FOR "HOT WINDS."

To the Editor of the Eagle.

Having in previous articles examined some of the principles and the causes involved in the phenomena of our arid plain belt, we propose in this article to dwell mainly on such appliances as when united cannot fail to make these prairies quite as productive as any portion of these broad lands.

We do not affirm that any appliances will entirely free the dwellers on those prairies from the occasional "dry seasons" to which these lands are more or less subject. These have their origin perhaps in "remote causes," of which we do not speak. But what we do affirm is this, that by the aid of such appliances as are clearly within our reach, the "hot winds" so called, can be relegated to the past, and that these lands can be made the best broad lands of the United States. Assuming that our air is stratified, and that by reason of gravity and the accumulation of pressure of the air above that of strata of air resting immediately on the earth's surface must be much more dense than the air above, and therefore, capable of great expansion from the heat of the earth. And under the law definitely indicated by science, viz. That as the temperature of the air is increased, its capacity to receive and store vapor is correspondingly increased. We can readily see that as the earth above the line of thirty degrees north latitude becomes heated by the midday sun's rays that there is a deficiency of surface moisture to supply this expanded air with proper vapor that then distends the air thus deficient will move northwardly in space to secure an equilibrium of temperature and vapor, and if not sup-
